All Four Blows Off Mogridge Are Good for Extra Bases; Fine Throw by Ruth Helps Joe Bush Register His 22d Victory of the Season

By W. B. Hanna

What the Yankees couldn't do to George Mogridge yesterday in quanity of base hits, they made up for in distance. They made only four hits off the left-hander, who had a lot of effective hooks, but every hit was an extra base hit, and every one counted. The Yankees won, 3 to 1, winning the whole Washington series of three games. As the Browns lost at Cleveand, the Yankees' lead was stretched to two and one-half games.

The champions kept up their proupport of good pitching. By such means they won all three games without any gush of base hits. Their batting was, in fact, tenuous yesterday, it was confined to two innings, the second and third, and to four hits in second and third, and to four hits in number.

However, the fact that the hitting was confined to two innings was a virtue and not a weakness. It meant bunched hits. Dugan, Pipp and Ward did the hitting which won for the Yankees, and did all of the Yankee hitting. Dugan made a two-bagger, Pipp a two-bagger and a triple, Ward a two-bagger with two on bases. Just like that. A few earnest and soulful biffs at the right time and the game was won.

All for Extra Bases All for Extra Bases

How many games have been played and won with not a single by the winner the writer can't say, having no records for such freak performances handy, but they must be few and far between, much scarcer than no-hit games. This particular incursion into the domain of the unusual had bunched, hitting, steady, clever fielding and the steady, resourceful pitching of Joe Bush to make it successful. It was Bush's twenty-second victory of the scason.

The Senators did not make much of a fight to help out the admirable pitching of Mogridge. They were dispirited, apparently, and their game was without lustre. The Yanks, on the other and, approached their jobs like skilled workmen who purposed doing it right. I ush's pitching, unasailable in all but one inning, no doubt heightened their appearance of tameness, though they ppeared that way in all three games. There was some fear by the fans that the Yanks wouldn't get in four and a haif innings, but they went all the way under the sullen clouds. The world, or the part of it that reads of such matters, should be informed that a play by Ruth in the inning in which ush wabbled the fumble, was a great comfort and aid to the latter. Never imagine the Babe as mono-dynamic. When he can't hit in runs he can keep the other people from doing it. He copped a rally in the fourth with as ica a throw to the plate as ever willed a perfect course from outfield that well known and much sought imghold.

Pipp opened the second inning with two-bagger to the wall. Huggins int have foreseen a tough day with gridge, for that early in the game began playing 'en close to his belot, the work of the second inning with gridge, for that early in the game began playing 'en close to his belot, the work of the Browns, he has been attempting to it bleachers. Two runs came in. Dugan opened the third with a two-gree to right center and screed on pre triple to the same suburb, after it had whifed on a slow curve on present in the fourth. Bush passed two and Brower and Lamotte tapped the for run in the fourth. Bush passed two and Brower and Lamotte tapped two ends. Lamotte's hit, with two difference in the second, and into Rich's parabolic pip as it came on the first parabolic chang lunging. Bush, however, with change of pace and speed along a lower plane, solved the difficulty.

Dugan came all the way to the bat-ter's box for Harris's foul in the erst inning. Schang' thought he needed the exercise.

A play on Rice's grounder in the third inning wasn't far from two errors. Pipp didn't hold it, and when le tossed to Bush in an endeavor to retire Rice the latter went on to secand when Schang, who was backing up, failed to stop the ball.

It wasn't a brilliant day for Schang. Vo let Mogridge put two straight ones over on him. Never took his bat off is shoulder. However, he made a nice lay in putting Ruth's throw on a runner at the plate.

Ward and Bush caught Brower napping at second in the sixth.

In the first Scott was a mobile Gibraltar in the series, but with the fail he didn't get a hit.

Sherry Smith and Big Lead Fade in Seventh Inning, but Al Mamaux Proves a Capable Rescuer; Retires Side on Strikes in the Eighth

By John Kieran

Rotund Uncle Wilbert's round Robins picked on the world's champions for the second successive time yesterday and annoyed four Giant pitchers to the extent of prying thirteen hits loose from the aforesaid flingers. Thereby the Flatbush Fusileers won the pastime at Ebbets Field by the score of 7 to 4.

From a transpontine point of view it was an afternoon well spent, with Sherry Smith and Al Mamaux cellaborating on a neat but not gaudy victory over the Clan McGraw, which is supposed to be the natural enemy and the favorite prey of the Brooklyn species. The only reason that the Borcugh of Baby Carriages doesn't declare a legal holiday on such festive occasions as a Brooklyn victory over New York is because the happy event cemes so often that the rubber-tired wheels of progress would be tied up in a traffic jam.

Therefore, the followers of Uncie Wilbert's hired men take their victories in a spirit of moderation. They were quite content yesterday with having the Robins lay four Ginant pitchers end to end and parade up and down their prostrate carcasses with more or less eclat. The gentlementhus rudely mishandled were, in order of their discomfiture, Jess Barnes, Rosy Billi Ryan, Claude Jonnard and "V Period" Barnes. Of this army Jonnard was the only hurler who escaped without the trampling bruises made by enemy athletes in rushing across the scoring pan.

The Jess of the Barnes tribe started the festivity, withdrew under heavy fire, and was duly debited with the loss of the game. Sherry Smith flung his port slants at the Polo Grounders without the trampling bruises made by enemy athletes in rushing across the scoring pan.

An Inning of Many Hits

The merry music of the base hit started at full blast in the ferry first inning. Smith was pounded by the Giants, but no scores resulted from the bombardment. Barnes, however, was poked and joited to the tune of four hits and three runs. Singles by Olson, Johnston and Myers, and a soaring double by Bert Griffith were the blows that counted on the register. A one-base blow by Sherry Smith in the second, followed by an infield out and a single to center by James Johnston. Esq., added another tally for the Robins.

When Buck Wheat opened the third stanza for Brooklyn with a triple to the right center exit Field Marshal Hughey Jennings advanced from the dugout and asked Jess Barnes if he didn't think that too much was enough on such a dull, drab day. "I can take a hint," said Jess, and was on his way out in no time. Rosy Bill Ryan intruded on the pastime and Wheat scored the fifth counter for the Robins on a single by Andy High. A double by Sherry Smith in person, a sacrifice bunt and a passed ball by Pancho Snyder gave Uncle Wilbert's boys a run in the fourth, bringing the score to 6 to 0.

There the Robins rested and the Giants began their labors. A triple by Frank Frisch and a sacrifice fly by Irish Meusel brought the first New York tally over the pan in the sixth, but more were in the making. Young, Kelly, Cunningham and Snyder singled in succession, Ross Young scoring. Lee King essayed to bat for Ryan with the bases filled and came near being the ruination of the ball game. Zack Wheat grabbed his long drive just before it fell into the left field bleachers. Kelly easily scored on the catch and the Giants had three runs.
